Building a Citizen Society: The Emerging Politics of Republican Democracy

Edited by Stuart White and Daniel Leighton

‘In the recent renaissance of classical republicanism, one of the main challenges is to elaborate its implications for how democracies should be organized and orientated. This volume addresses that challenge and is a major contribution to neorepublican democratic theory.’

Philip Pettit

L.S. Rockeller University Professor of Politics and Human Values Princeton University

‘Progressive politics is in retreat across Europe, and social democratic parties are having difficulty renewing themselves both in and out of office. This book sets out an attractive progressive public philosophy to fill the void, which the editors call “Republican Democracy”. The book explores this complex notion in accessible ways, and creates a compelling new agenda for public discussion.’

David Held, Graham Wallas Professor of Political Science, LSE

Building a Citizen Society includes discussion on: constitutional reform and participation; security; domination in the workplace; the distribution of assets; Basic Income; citizens’ organising initiatives; democracy and time; green politics; solidarity and diversity; and determining the common good.
